It looks like play.....

Through dramatic play a child learns to:

- Be flexible in his/her thinking
- Express self and ideas with words
- Experiment with adult roles
- Solve social problems through negotiation with peers
- Sort and organize play things
- Make decisions
- Improvise and use objects in a symbolic way
- Have an object represent something else (abstract thinking)
- Carry out own ideas with cooperation of others
- Role play- learn to understand how it feels to be someone else
- Exercise imagination and creative play

Through social studies a child:

- Develops an understanding of feelings of self and others
- Sees self in relationship to others in the family, school and community
- Begins to value uniqueness of all people
- Shares and celebrates the traditions, customs, and culture of self and others.

Home Learning Fun

- Play outside and find fall animals and birds. Count how many different ones you find.
- Create a family timeline. Record milestones (first word, first steps, first vacation, etc.) with photos, drawings, and writings. Include year. Can be as simple or complex as you'd like.
- Enjoy being together and exploring something new.
